Interest in the national interscholastic constitutional oratorical contest, and in the local prizes given by "The San Diego Union" is at a high pitch at Point Loma high school, where the final tryout will be held next Tuesday to pick the young orator who will represent the school in the city finals. From a large number of contestants the field has been narrowed down to three, who will compete before the school for the honor of representing the school and for a silver trophy as well.

Kirk Smith, editor and publisher of "The Beach News," serving the Point Loma high school territory, has offered a silver cup to the winner of the school contest, and Dorothy Myer, Willis Doetschman, and Dorothy McNiff will compete next Tuesday for that cup. Then the winner will compete in the city finals for the three prizes offered by "The Union," $25 for first, $15 for second and $10 for third. The schools in this final contest will be the San Diego Senior High School, Point Loma High and La Jolla High.

The winner of the city finals will then have a chance to win more honors and prizes in semi-final contests, and then in contests for the Southern California and state championships, the regional and national championships and finally the international championship. — "San Diego Union," April 21.

ROLLER SKATING SWEEPING THE COUNTRY AS POPULAR PASTIME

Edward A. Back in Missouri, cities like East St. Louis are officially anthorizing the roping off of certain section of paved streets for the accommodation of skaters. In the college centers children and grown-ups alike use roller skates for traveling 'round town and regular rules of the road are cheerfully followed. Kickham's M. B. Rink finds an echo of the popularity of the pastime in constantly increasing attendance, while the weekly polo contests are gaining wide favor with the spring and summer session in full swing.

Kraft says, "Treat Mother Like a Sweetheart" by presenting her with a beautiful box of Whitman's "Samplers". MAYBE BARNUM WAS RIGHT

"It's about time for some smooth-tongued advertising faker to hit our town with some scheme whereby he subtracts from the business men a liberal donation for some worthless scheme, leaving them a sick bunch after it is all over. We go to them with a legitimate proposition, one that has been proven a success, and they pass it up, but a stranger can take them in most any old time. We believe Barnum was about right."

What appeared recently to be an eruption of Mount Lassen, the United States' ouly active volcano, was proved to be nothing but a shadow cast by the sun shining against a sheet of snow blowing around the peak. From some distances the appearance was that of a wreath of black smoke coming from the volcano, and gave rise to report that the cone again was active. Nearby residents said there are such eruptions of Mount Lassen whenever there is a high wind. In like manner Mount Shasta was also "in eruption" recently, when a gale blew snow all over the town of Mount Shasta, which thus was treated to a snowstorm with the sun shining all the time.

Lawrence Luther, 3½-year-old son of Rev. and Mrs. Edgar B. Luther, Woodland, is growing more peppy daily with the best part of a safety pin in his stomach. It was learned that a few nights ago the lad started to examine a large sized safety pin, with the result that he swallowed the large end, the point being broken off. His cries while the pin was passing down his throat, attracted the fond parents, who rushed him to a local sanitarium. The lad seemed to be suffering very little. He was placed on a diet. There have been no evil results so far.

A Lame Jumper for Mother

By JANE OSBORN

(Copyright.)

REGINALD FOSTER'S devotion to his mother was like a big brother toward a rather frivolous younger sister. For Reginald at thirty felt and often looked older than his mother at forty-eight. His own father had died when he was young and his mother was now wife of the well-to-do Peter Posner. Every Monday morning when Reginald reached his office there was a letter lying on his desk from his mother—that is unless he had chanced to spend the week-end with her at the Posner country house thirty miles out.

This morning there was little news save that dear Peter had put through some very important contracts recently. "I meant to come to town last week, but everyone seemed to be having parties here and I couldn't get off. So I wonder if you'll do some shopping for me. You know how busy Peter is—don't you, Reginald darling? I really must have a lame jumper. I haven't an idea how much money they cost, but get a good one." Then followed a list including everything from a sundial for the garden to a good dog for one of the children. "And don't forget," said Reginald's mother in closing, "to have the lame jumper sent out at once. Monday and Tuesday I shall be motoring to the shore and back, but I do want the things Tuesday when I get back." Reginald was annoyed—as he always was on a busy Monday to have a shopping list to attend to for his mother—but he felt annoyance not so much with his mother as with Peter, her husband. "Pretty sleek," quoth Reginald aloud. "He's too busy to bother."

Reginald heard two or three notes of a pleasant little laugh which was quickly suppressed when he looked up. Daphne, his partner's twenty-year-old daughter, had come into the office ostensibly to get her father to forward her next month's allowance and had come in unannounced to Reginald's office.

"Who's pretty sleek?" she asked.

"Peter's sleek," said Reginald abruptly. "Peter Posner, who married my mother."

"Oh, I think Mr. Posner is the dearest old thing—he's your stepfather, I suppose."

"I don't consider him any sort of a father to me," answered Reginald, "and he isn't at all old. He is some years younger than my mother, if that interests you—so he is not much past forty. I happen to be thirty myself."

"You poor old dear," said Daphne.

Reginald looked intently at Daphne without a smile. "You are very charming, Daphne," he told her. "There's no one I like so well at a dance—but in an office you're a nuisance."

"All right, I'll run away," said the girl, moving toward the door. "Only why did you say Peter Posner was pretty sleek?"

"Because he lets me do his wife's shopping. I've got to take time this noon to go out and buy a dog and a radio and a lame jumper, whatever that is."

"Ask me to have lunch with you," suggested Daphne, "and I'll help you."

"You wouldn't help, you'd hinder," Reginald told her. "You're a witch and you know it. No man could keep his head with you around."

Several times that morning Reginald looked at the list written in his mother's bold, clear writing. There was no doubt about the lame jumper. Peter took time to telephone to a large department store and asked if they had any lame jumpers in stock, but no one there knew what he meant.

"Maybe it's a new book," some one suggested, and some one else suggested that it might be something to eat. "It sounds like some sort of crippled acrobat," Reginald insisted. Of course it was impossible to try to reach his mother by telephone. She was away on a motor trip.

It was at two o'clock, after Reginald had visited every sort of store he could think of—even the florist's shop—that he telephoned to Daphne. "You haven't an idea what my mother meant by a lame jumper, have you?"

Daphne giggled. "I have an idea," she said. "Only you don't say it right."

"Will you help me buy one?" begged Reginald.

"Gladly, if you'll take me to tea."

At five that afternoon Reginald and Daphne, having finished their shopping, sat together in Daphne's favorite restaurant.

"I knew right away what she wanted," said Daphne. "Of course your mother should have put an accent over the 'e,' but you ought to have known. It's 'lahmay.' Lame jumpers are quite the fashion. I'm thinking of getting one myself, though they are a trifle old."

"So'm I," grumbled Reginald. "You told me so this morning. Daphne, why, when you think I'm such an impossible old fogey, do you torment me so?"

"Because," said Daphne looking intently at the cinnamon toast before her, "because I want you to propose. I had three proposals last week—and it does seem foolish to keep on saying 'no' to everyone—but then," Daphne interrupted herself, "if you don't care about me—"

"You don't mean you'd have me?"

"Of course I would, you old simpleton," assured Daphne. "And Reginald dear—after we're married I'm going to call Peter Posner 'papa.' May I?"

Napoleon Bonaparte

(Part II)

FOR the son of a Corsican lawyer to plan a world empire, nowadays, would be sheer insanity. But in Napoleon Bonaparte's time and country almost anything was possible to the man who knew how to use his chances. Tavern waiters became field marshals; servants rose to dukes. For the first time in France's history it was the man, not his ancestry, that counted. Bonaparte, being the greatest genius in France, rose highest in the mighty upheaval that followed the overthrow of old customs. Having, as first consul, set matters to rights at home, he drew sword against all Europe. Heretofore long, time-wasting campaigns and acres of red tape had marked every war. Bonaparte changed all this. Whirlwind campaigns and defiance of all outworn military traditions formed the keynote of his warfare. On May 13, 1800, he hurried an army across the Alps, captured Piedmont by a brilliant victory over the Austrians at Marengo, June 14, and dictated peace terms to Austria. Other countries, scared by the example, followed suit, and, for the first time in many years, universal peace seemed established all over the civilized world.

Meantime, in France, Bonaparte was forwarding his personal ambitions to such good effect that, when the project of crowning him emperor of the French was broached, it was carried by a popular vote of 3,000,000 to 3,000. He sent for Pope Pius VII to crown him at Paris amid imposing ceremonies, December 2, 1804, but at the last moment he snatched the imperial diadem from the pope's hands and crowned himself. He then placed the crown on the head of Josephine, his wife. The following year he became king of Italy as well.

And now came a change of character so remarkable as to support the old rumor that Bonaparte the general and Napoleon the emperor were two different men. From being shy, lean and silent, Napoleon grew assertive, fat, talkative. The rigid, temperate simplicity of early days gave way to court etiquette, pomp and imperial splendor. His court was brilliant and extravagant.

England, resenting certain of France's annexations, declared war, and Napoleon prepared to invade Great Britain. But Russia, Austria and Sweden formed an alliance with England and the plan was changed. Napoleon, with 180,000 men, crossed Bavaria, took Vienna and met the combined Austrian and Russian armies at Austerlitz. Each of the three armies was commanded by an emperor. After a long and bloody battle Napoleon defeated the allies with fearful loss. He then thrashed Prussia at Jena and Auerstadt and captured Berlin. Russia's army was marching to Prussia's aid, but Napoleon met and overwhelmed it at Friedland, June 14, 1807, and forced the czar to sue for peace. He next conquered Spain and Portugal, and extended his conquests throughout the continent of Europe. He made his brother king of Spain and his brother-in-law king of Naples, and lavished similar royal honors on others of his family.

Spain, dissatisfied that a low-born Corsican should rule it, revolted. England and Portugal allied themselves with the Spaniards and the "War of the Peninsula" began; the English army being commanded by Sir Arthur Wellesley, afterward duke of Wellington. Austria took this time to rise against Napoleon. The emperor hurried an army across the frontier and inflicted a crushing defeat on the Austrian host at Wagram, July 6, 1809, and dictated humiliating terms of peace to the beaten country. Nearly all the world was now at the Corsican genius' feet.

Yet he was far from satisfied. He saw that he held his sovereignty through sheer strength; Austria's action had taught him that the instant his back was turned the beaten nations would spring at him like wild animals at their trainer. He knew that, even while kings and countries cringed to him, they secretly despised him as an upstart. Only so long as he could overawe foes by active, aggressive power could he hope to retain his mastery.

He had no son to inherit his title. Moreover, he now saw his boyish mistake in having married a stupid woman of the people. He had long since outgrown his early adoration for the fickle Josephine. He calmly proceeded to divorce her, and on March 11, 1810, he married the Archduchess Marie Louise, daughter of the emperor of Austria. The proud Austrian monarch had no choice but to submit, and to sell his daughter for the sake of his country's welfare. Marie Louise cared nothing for her imperial bridegroom, and in his later days of adversity promptly deserted him. They had one son, who, while in his cradle, was proclaimed king of Rome. This son died of consumption at twenty-one.

The years 1810 and 1811 marked the flood-tide of Napoleon's prosperity. His dominions extended from Naples to Denmark. He was proclaimed ruler of Spain, Italy, Switzerland, Holland and most of the German states. Russia, Austria and other nations were at his feet. England alone held out against him. Never before or since has such tremendous authority been vested in one man.

CHIC BLACK AND WHITE MODES; TAILORED SUITS FOR MATRON

NO MORE remarkable success for the black-and-white vogue has ever been recorded in the pages of history than that now registering throughout the realm of fashion. The two "studies in black and white" as here illustrated are highly typical of the reigning mode.

We are in the midst of an era of sleeveless jackets, such as the one which achieves assured smartness for the costume shown here to the left. Full white sleeves for the underblouse and a plaited skirt of white crepe, the latter bordered with black satin to match the jacket, interpret style in every sense of the word.

The bloused styling of the black-and-white frock to the right is also outstanding this season. White is introduced in a full vestee and in a panel and borderings on the skirt. The hat which this stylishly clad young woman is wearing expresses utmost millinery chic. It is one of the new snug-fitting earlap types. For the younger set these tight molded-to-the-head shapes are quite the rage.

It is not possible to overemphasize the increasing importance of black and-white. Not only does it occupy the center of the stage at this moment, but fabrics and accessories for the coming months all bear a message of continued favor for black-and-white combinations.

Among the prospects for summer are dresses which combine filmy black with white lace in their development. Lovely, too, are the new georgette prints showing a white background trellised over with huge black roses and other floral patternings. White shoes inlaid with black kid and vice versa will add a beauty note to the black-and white ensemble.

That Paris so enthusiastically indorses the all-black vogue redounds to the good fortune of the matron. No mode is quite so distingue for the woman of dignity and years beyond flapper age as that of a handsome black silk costume.

Because of the especial importance at present of the black silk coat, also the black silk tailored suit, likewise the black silk one-piece afternoon frock, rich black silk weaves are of paramount interest throughout exclusive fabric displays. These place special stress on taffeta, faille, bengaline, moire, reversible satin, also heavy crepe.

That moire silk lends itself admirably to semi-tailored smartness one must agree after studying the style-points of the frock here pictured. While this dress has a slenderizing effect, yet fullness is introduced ever so adroitly in side panels held in place under scallops arranged in tiers. All the scallops are bound with cire satin.

Another favorite frock for the matron is of black satin styled with to-one-side drapes, cascades falling both from the left shoulder and from waistline. These one-side fastenings and surplice effects are particularly becoming to mature figures, and they are the "last word" in the matter of dress fashioning.

The matron who has wearied of the regulation cloth suit will find relief this spring in the way of silk or satin tailored suits and ensembles. These feature skirts with plaits somewhere in their making, topped with jackets which, while they are neatly tailored, maintain a charming feminized styling. Because of the black-and-white enthusiasm now on, the blouse to wear under the jacket is preferably of white crepe or satin, although silk-print vestees are also in fashion.

Silk topcoats for spring, also says the mode, either bengaline, faille or satin. They show intriguing details of pintucks, folds, seamwork and some are quilted. JULIA BOTTOMLEY.

Jackson Murray, tenor, formerly with Kolb and Dill productions is also featured, with the Pyramid Trio, Vera Van, in new songs and dainty costumes and Constance and Clarissa, the last of the famous Russian ballet, in a comedy adagio routine.

A gigantic array of supplementary entertainment has also been arranged including short film subjects of unusual merit.

Al Lyons and his band have been selected to dedicate the New California, augmenting his recent orchestra with new talent. This popular organization is composed of a brilliant representation of outstanding Pocific coast artists.

My hair is now bobbed,
My waist line is low,
This age has no use for those who are "slow,"
But I hate it at morn,
I hate it at noon,
I look in a mirror and see a baboon.
Yet I must carmine my lips,
And rouge up my cheeks;
Of course I must look
Like the other old freaks.
But at night, when my head,
On my pillow I lay,
"Bless the old bob" I thankfully say;
No braids to entangle,
No hairpins to fight,
No dreams to disturb me,
Nor goblins to fright.
I may peacefully slumber,
Throughout the whole night;
So "Al Hail to the bob,"
And "All hail to the age,"
That emancipates woman,
From youth to old age!

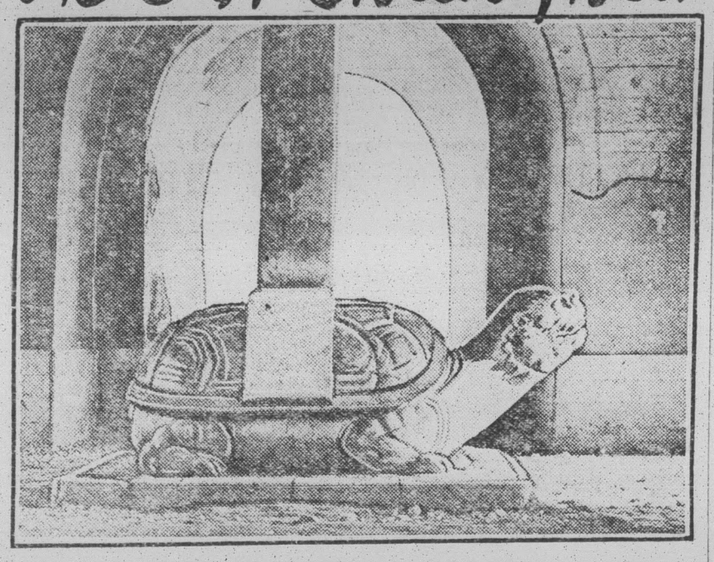
About Shanghai



Stone Turtle at the Ming Tombs, Nanking.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

WHILE the eyes of the western world have been turned during recent weeks toward Shanghai, headquarters for white soldiers and sailors and marines in China, the footsteps of thousands of refugees, white and yellow, have been directed toward that same city, their hope of safety. Kiangsu, the province in which Shanghai lies, is one of the most densely populated political units in the world. It is only slightly larger than Indiana, and even under normal conditions ten times as many people live there as inhabit the Hoosier state. Chinese from all parts of the republic, speaking half a dozen different dialects, and foreigners from all corners of the globe make up the conglomerate mass of humanity.

Even the country districts are so congested that the largest farms in the province are little more than small family truck gardens to the American farmer. They seldom cover more than three or four acres.

Kiangsu is the pioneer province of railroading in the Celestial empire. The first road was built in 1876 from Shanghai to Woosung, a distance of 12 miles. But Kiangsu owes much of its development to its water routes before the railroad came, particularly to the Yangtze river and the Grand canal that flows nearly the entire length of the province.

For hundreds of years the canal was filled with shipping and was the only means of communication between the north and the south; but today much of the canal is in ruins, due largely to the construction of a railroad along the route and the development of Kiangsu river for navigation. Hundreds of small canals branch off into the back country. They are used to irrigate farms and as highways, for most of the roads outside the large cities are wheelbarrow tracks.

Shanghai Is Big and Busy.

Nearly 2,000,000 of Kiangsu's people live in Shanghai. Thousands of the population are employed in the city's thriving industries. There are more than fifty cotton mills and numerous silk, rice and flour mills, and hundreds of large factories producing matches, cigarettes, jewelry, pottery and many other articles.

Lying in a protected location 12 miles up the Whangpoo river, Shanghai is one of the finest commercial ports in China. As one approaches the harbor he sees nearly ten miles of docks stretching along the river front. Huge ocean going vessels from all parts of the world come and go almost in a steady stream, fast motor boats dart here and there through the harbor, and the shipping industry and factories along the river front roar with activity. One could easily imagine himself entering a busy New England port if it were not for the singsong chatter of orientals emanating from Chinese junks and sampans that dot the water and cluster about the docks.

This hybrid city of the East and West is normally what many a traveler finds Paris is supposed to be but isn't—perpetually gay and carefree. Europeans and Americans, forced by business or government assignments to live there on the other side of the world in a none too kindly climate, seem with one accord to have determined to make the experience as pleasant as possible. White men's working hours might have been framed by a visionary Socialist for the year 2000. In the piping times of peace many offices open at ten o'clock, grant a rest period from twelve to two, and close at four so that the harassed merchant and banker and clerk may hurry away to club or casino or tennis court, golf links or houseboat for what Robert Louis Stevenson called "the real business of life."

The Bund, the water-front thoroughfare of occidental Shanghai, is normally crowded with prosperous, unhurried Westerners; and Bubbling Spring road of an afternoon is thronged with stylishly dressed men and women of leisure and fashionable equipages that would do credit to Fifth avenue, the Champs Elysee or the Ring strasse in the days of Vienna's glory. The city is thoroughly cosmopolitan. Perhaps no other city of the world surpasses it in this respect except Cairo.

The Foreign Settlements.

There are two Shanghais: the native city, and the foreign concessions. Shanghai was one of the first Chinese cities to be thrown open to western trade, one of the five "treaty ports" established in 1842. British merchants who moved in during the next few years obtained a concession to manage their municipal affairs in their settlement. The French and American residents joined in the arrangement, but later the French set up a municipality of their own which is maintained separately today. Residents of other nationalities have thrown in their lot with the British and Americans, and today about 20 nations have arrangements with China in connection with trade and extraterritorial rights in Shanghai.

By far the larger part of the population of the entire urban group—Chinese, French and international—that bears the name "Shanghai," is Chinese, but the concentration is not greatest in the narrow-streeted, dirty, smelly native city. So well have the foreigners governed their concessions that Chinese have flocked to those sections. The international city is especially a favorite residence for retired Chinese officials from other parts of the country. It has become a model, too, in the matter of street pavements, sanitation and police methods, and since the revolution has been copied extensively by Chinese cities in other parts of the country.

After riding two hours north of Shanghai by railroad, through fertile, flat country to the Grand canal, one finds himself among five million more people of Kiangsu within a radius of 40 miles of Soochow. Many of the people in the outlying districts are engaged in poultry raising and even the city people take pride in their flocks, particularly ducks. Millions of Kiangsu eggs that are not locally consumed or shipped fresh are dried or frozen, and shipped all over the world.

On the west of the city are a hundred beautiful lakes and the Great lake—sixty miles wide in some places—is just over the beautiful low ridge of hills on the east, one of the few hilly spots in fertile, flat Kiangsu.

Other Large Cities Near By.

For centuries Soochow has been the principal Chinese silk market. But its business is not confined to silk and poultry, for in the bazaars that line the streets and even surround the temple of Buddha, one can buy anything from a bird cage to an outdoor haircut, or a good-for-everything pill.

Nearly all Soochow streets that are not Venetian style are narrow and are monopolized by 'rickshaws and wheelbarrows. If one does not ride, one is apt to get poked by the bars of a 'rickshaw.

Nanking, Wusih, Chinkiang and Yangchow are also thickly populated districts. Except Nanking these cities are all on the Grand canal. Each of them boast more than 100,000 inhabitants. Nanking is the capital of Kiangsu and was capital of the empire in the Ming dynasty. It is the largest walled city in the world, but only a small portion of the city is now within the 21-mile barrier.

Nanking is not comparable to Shanghai as a commercial center, but it boasts its educational facilities and the development of Chinese scholars. Public and private graded schools, and the Nanking university, supported by three American religious denominations, have offered courses in all branches of education. A naval college is also located there. Scholars of Nanking were holding civil service tests several hundred years before Columbus sailed for the West.

Visitors to Nanking are at once attracted to the tomb of the first emperor of the Ming dynasty. An avenue, a mile long, approaching the tomb, commands a splendid view of the city. At one end of the avenue is a tower containing a large black marble turtle, the Chinese symbol of long life. On its back is a marble tablet eulogizing the emperor who is buried at the other end of the avenue. Between the tower and the tomb the avenue is lined on both side with sculptures of elephants, camels, lions and tigers, facing one another, and now and then one sees an enormous statue of a great warrior standing as a sentinel guarding the funeral way. The tomb and avenue are decaying and the marble statues present a peculiar sight standing in a row in the middle of a field. Stones are piled high on the elephants' backs, thrown there by Chinese who believe if the stones thrown remain on the elephant they will bring good luck.

SCHOOL DAYS

Mother's Cook Book

"If every one were wise and sweet,
And every one were jolly:
If every heart with gladness beat,
And none were melancholy:
If none should grumble or complain,
And nobody should labor
In evil work, but each were fair
To love and help his neighbor—
Oh, what a happy world 'twould be
For you and me, for you and me."

GOOD THINGS TO EAT

WE ALL have some recipes which we enjoy preparing again and again. One of these is a good cooky recipe, for in most homes the cooky jar is a very important part of the household equipment, and it is wise to keep it well stocked.

Martha's Cookies.

Take one cupful of shortening, add two cupfuls of sugar, three well-beaten eggs, salt and one-half cupful of milk. Sift two cupfuls of flour with two teaspoonfuls of baking powder and add lemon flavoring, or the grated rind of a lemon. Let stand an hour to chill, then roll with as little flour as possible.

Raisin Pie.

Take one cupful of raisins, chop fine and cook in one cupful of water five minutes; add three-fourths of a cupful of sugar well mixed with a tablespoonful of cornstarch; add the yolks of two eggs and the juice and grated rind of a lemon.

Jelly Roll.

Beat three eggs until light, add one cupful of sugar, two tablespoonfuls of water and a pinch of salt, stir in one cupful of flour sifted with two teaspoonfuls of baking powder, adding the flour gradually. Bake in a dripping pan well greased. Turn out on a towel wrung out of cold water. Trim the edges, spread with jelly and roll up while warm.

Apple Roll.

Make a rich biscuit dough, roll out and cover with one cupful of chopped apples well sugared and flavored with either cinnamon or nutmeg. Bake one-half hour, then pour over some cranberry sauce and bake ten minutes more.

Chocolate Pudding.

Beat one egg, add one-half cupful of sugar and one cupful of milk, pour over one and one-half cupfuls of flour sifted with three teaspoonfuls of baking powder; when well blended add two squares of chocolate, melted, a pinch of salt. Steam one and one-half hours.

SOMETHING TO THINK ABOUT

By F. A. WALKER

YOUR WEAK SPOT

A GIGANTIC ship of the air, carrying a burden of human freight, crumpled and fell, carrying with it to destruction a score and more of lives.

Examination of the wreckage showed that in the center of the great framework there was a weak spot which, when the strain of actual operation was placed upon it, could not stand the test and, failing, caused disaster.

Few of us realize on how precarious a base our success reposes until we dare summon courage to look upon our weakness.

Self-examination to most of us is not a pleasant bit of duty to perform, and for this reason we are apt to put it off with an "oh, don't bother me" attitude, and turn to something more agreeable.

In humans the perilous weak spot may be in temper, perverseness, indifference, untidiness, selfishness or inefficiency, all productive of a fatty degeneration of the moral fiber.

The thing to do is to discover just what our shortcomings are, and, having determined their nature, we must then proceed to overcome them—to patch them up, as it were, and resolve that they shall not again be permitted to imperil our progress.

It will cost tremendous will-power to do this, but the reward in the end will compensate liberally for all the effort.

When in command of the American army, Washington was conscious of his weakness and sought strength through prayer in the silence of the forest. When he comprehended his lack of education, Lincoln became an earnest student.

These two beloved men learned where to press forward in the fullness of their strength.

And in such acts as these lies mastery.

If you imitate them, you, too, can overcome whatever weakness you may have before it becomes a settled habit and drags you down.

It is never too late to retrace steps, even though you may be "down and out."

If you are genuinely serious in your desire to rise in the world, to win respect, to put money in your purse, to write your name beside the successful, resolve today that you will no longer be impotent through frailties of your own.

Summon all your energy and with a heart of oak march on to victory.

By imploring Faith and Patience to help you, you will find the battle comparatively easy, the good results being in most instances out of all proportion to your anticipation.

Do You Know ~??~ That: ~??~

"HAND and Seal" originated when writing was not as generally understood as today, but was limited to a few clerks. Documents were then confirmed by the impression of the hand dipped in ink, and then the seal was duly added. As dipping the hand in ink was dirty and bothersome the thumb was later substituted. We are told that "scores of old English and French deeds are still in existence in which such signatures appear." Later the name was written and this writing came to be known as "the hand."

Hence the expression "Hand and Seal" has come to mean to confirm; to keep secure or secret.—Anna S. Turnquist.

THE EASY ROAD

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

THERE never was a road I came
I couldn't turn around;
You cannot get so deep in shame
But that the solid ground
Lies right behind. The way is straight,
The latest hour is not too late.

And say not sin's the easy way,
And righteousness the hard.
I've had my fun, I've had my play,
And I've discovered, pard,
That slipping down the thing grows flat,
But climbing up is not like that.

Each hour you get a finer view,
The higher that you climb,
Each day you find some gladness new—
You have a better time
Than they who walk the road below
They say it's easier to go.

Up here you find the fresher air,
You find the fairer flow'rs;
They walk among life's oozes there,
Up here the hills are ours;
The sun is bright, the skies are blue—
Up here's the easy road for you!

How It Started

SARCASM

SARCASM may be ironical, it may be clever and witty, but to be really sarcasm it must also have a barb that will hurt, a lever that pries apart some shame or pretense and lays it open to amusement and contempt.

The modern usage of the word might almost be said to be a figurative adaptation of its original meaning. For we have "sarcasm" from the ancient Greek, where it meant to tear flesh like dogs.

Modern weapons are likely to be intellectual rather than physical. Civilization forbids us to use our teeth, but the edge of sarcasm can be just as sharp, and sometimes inflicts hurts far deeper than torn flesh!

Substitute for Sun

Dwellers in smoke-shrouded cities and such as sleep by day and work by night can make up what they suffer from lack of sufficient sunshine by the use of electric sun baths, according to an eminent British health authority. Prolonged periods of wet weather tend noticeably to increase the spread of sickness in large cities, and pulmonary diseases are prevalent where sunlight is lacking, as are many ailments peculiar to children. Electric sun baths, the British physician referred to declares, offer a satisfactory substitute for nature's own.

What Is Fame?

Drawing by Ray Walters.

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

WHAT is fame? The dictionary, the court of last resort in questions of definition, says it is "renown," "celebrity," "that which causes one's name to be remembered." And in that last synonym lies the joker.

For Fame is a capricious goddess who often loves to trick those whom she elevates to a position of distinction. Often she gives generously with one hand and with the other suddenly takes her gift away. She promises that men's names will not be forgotten. So they, poor fools, burn out their lives to win "renown." And then they learn that the joke's on them. Their names are remembered but they themselves are forgotten!

Scientists, inventors and the like seem to be her favorite dupes. In this electrical age, and especially in these days of almost universal use of the radio, everyone uses the terms "watt," "volt," "ohm" and "ampere," but how many of us know anything about James Watt of Scotland, Count Alassandro Volta of Italy, George Simon Ohm of Germany or Andre Marie Ampere of France? At least, their names survive in these common words even if they themselves are forgotten, but how about that modern Prometheus who made it possible for us to do away with the clumsy, old-fashioned method of starting a fire with flint and steel? How many persons can name the man who invented the modern match? Very few, probably.

Yet it was only ninety years ago that Janos Irinyi, a Hungarian analytical chemist, was successful where his professor had failed and by using phosphorus instead of sulphur, produced a match that flared satisfactorily. He sold his invention for about $30. In 1846 he founded a match factory and seemed to be on the road to great wealth. Then the Hungarian revolution two years later stopped his work. He died in poverty in 1895.

We cherish the silhouettes of our ancestors as precious heirlooms because, unless our forefathers were wealthy enough to have their portraits painted, these silhouettes are the only things which give us any idea of how they looked. But we know nothing at all about Etiennne de Silhouette, a French minister of finance, except that somewhere we may have heard that he had a reputation for stinginess. We cherish also those old daguerreotypes of our grandparents or great-grandparents, which tell us even better than does a silhouette how they looked. But do we ever think of M. Daguerre, the Frenchman, who in 1839 gave to the world this first form of modern photography as we now know it? Not much!

When it rains we slip on a mackintosh, but we're not likely to stop even for a moment to be grateful to Charles Mackintosh of Manchester, England, whose invention of waterproof cloth makes it possible for us to keep dry. We motor smoothly over macadam roads with never a thought for John Loudon Macadam, who won fame (?) as a road engineer in Scotland. Along the way, we stop for a sandwich at some roadside stand, because like the Earl of Sandwich we want a light lunch which can be eaten with comfort as well as speed. If something goes wrong with the car, we open the tool box and perhaps take out a Stillson wrench to fix it. (Yes, a man named Stillson invented this handy tool. But who was he, anyway?)

And so it goes. On long railroad journeys we ride in comfort in pullman cars and it's doubtful if we ever give a thought to George Mortimer Pullman, the New York cabinetmaker who first transformed an old day coach into the first sleeping car. We may have a mansard roof on our house but we don't know that it's called that because a French architect named Mansard helped circumvent an old Paris law that tried to limit the height of houses by specifying the distance from the ground at which all roofs should begin.

Nor is the caprice of Fame confined to those to whom we should be most grateful because they have given us useful or indispensable articles of every-day use. Did you ever say "I certainly am going to hand him a wallop!" "Wallop" is a perfectly good word in the English language and familiar to everyone. But who remembers now a certain Sir John Wallop, a British general who inflicted so many defeats upon the French that "Let's Wallop them!" became a by-word in England?

If you ever have to "take a ride in the Black Maria" it may be some comfort to you to meditate upon the thought that you know why it's so-called and that the policeman who arrested you doesn't. So on the way to the station you might entertain him with the following historical facts: In the old colonial days, Maria Lee, a negress, kept a sailor's boarding house in Boston. A woman of great stature and strength, she not only had the whole lawless element of her part of town in awe of her, but she also helped the authorities keep the peace. It is said that at one time she, unassisted, took three riotous sailors to the lock-up and whenever a particularly troublesome person was to be subdued everybody immediately said "send for Black Maria." So it appears that she was not one to "let George do it." In that respect she was different from Louis XII of France. Although himself a strong ruler he was fortunate in having a prime minister who was a clever executive and an able manager. Georges d'Amboise was his name and as Louis learned more and more to depend upon him to perform disagreeable tasks, more and more was the sovereign of France given to saying "Que Georges le fasse" (Let George do it!)

Try this sentence on your neighbor: "When a man in defiance of the bone dry laws gets filled up with gin rickeys he's likely to get reckless and let 'er go gallagher." He probably will understand what you mean, all right. But ask him who was Bone and Rickey and Gallagher! If he can't answer, tell him this: John Bone was formerly sheriff of Chippewa county, Mich., and through rigid enforcement of the early liquor laws in that state made his county extremely arid. So when the legislature passed the next anti-liquor law it was named the Bone Dry bill. Col. Joseph K. Rickey of Fulton, Mo., invented the drink called a gin rickey. Gallagher (first name unknown) was city marshal of Harrodsburg, Ky. During a race meeting in Tipton county he was the driver of a fast trotting mare, entered in a race by Judge Beaver of Morgan county, which was looked upon as a certain winner. But some of the sporting fraternity, hoping to catch the judge unaware, imported a famous fast trotter and entered the horse in the race. At the end of the first half mile, the two horses came down the stretch, neck and neck, whereupon the judge shouted "Let 'er go, Gallagher!" Gallagher loosed the reins, the mare rushed forward and won the race by a dozen lengths.

What is fame? Judging from all these examples fame is a name and nothing more. Personified Fame is the goddess of caprice. She promises men that their names will not be forgotten and they think she is promising them that THEY will not be forgotten. Or she may be the goddess of jokes. Our children's children and their children after them may be riding around in a ford and to them Henry will be just a common man's name. For Fame loves her little joke—even a Ford joke.

Deaf Operator

It is well known that what are called "first-class" operators in telegraphy read messages not by means of punctures in strips of paper, which are only meant for beginners, but by sound—that is, by the clicks of the instrument. Of course, by practice, an operator's ear is rendered sensitive until at last he can catch the faintest whisperings of his instrument. It wouldn't be supposed, however, that this method of reading messages would suit a deaf man. And yet a deaf man has accustomed himself to these circumstances. A certain operator in Washington is deaf, but he sends and receives messages by the sense of feeling. He places his leg against the instrument table and reads by the swift jarring thus communicated; at the same time he watches the motions of the instrument.

An alarm clock attachment for wrist watches is a recent novelty.

Daddy's Evening Fairy Tale

IN THE MOVIES

Douglas and Dorothy were walking one day when something very strange, and very exciting happened.

At first Douglas and Dorothy could not make out what it was.

"That man standing upon the high box is shrieking at every one," said Dorothy. "I think he is very cross."

"But the people don't seem to mind what he says except they move about as he tells them to," said Douglas. "They don't look as if they thought he was angry."

And then they noticed that the man standing upon the high box was talking to them. He had a large black something before him, and he was turning around a little handle all the time.

"No, children," he was saying, "run as if you were afraid."

"But we're not afraid," said Douglas, putting his hands in his pockets. "We love adventures and we're not afraid of anything. We've had too good a time to be 'fraid-cats'!"

At that every one laughed and the man on the high box laughed too.

"We don't want you to be frightened," continued the man, "but you must run! That's part of the picture."

"What picture?" the children asked.

"The picture for the movies," said the man. "You can see yourselves on the screen later on! Now run! And when you have gone far enough I will call to you to come back."

Off started Douglas and Dorothy running for all they were worth, and later the man told them to see themselves on a certain day in a certain theater.

When that day came along Douglas and Dorothy, you may be sure, were at the theater before the doors were opened. Later Uncle John came too.

"We've come to see ourselves," they told the man at the door when at last it opened.

"You have, have you?" asked the man. "Well, I'd just like to tell you we're having Charlie Chaplin today on the screen. We don't need anything else."

Douglas and Dorothy didn't pay any attention. They were too excited,

"We're Not Afraid," Said Douglas.

and when Uncle John arrived it was plain to be seen that he, too, was quite excited at the thought of seeing the children in the movies!

Charlie Chaplin was there to be sure—making every one laugh, but later on there was a street scene of a great robbery, and of two children who were suspected as being the children of the famous robbers running away. It was a most exciting story!

And there Douglas and Dorothy saw themselves! How thrilling it was!

A wonderful story, and made up for just them it surely seemed.

There they were running—actually running—while some music played faster, faster to keep up with them.

"We've been in a wonder story," said Douglas.

"We've been in the movies," said Dorothy, feeling more important than any king or queen could possibly feel!

Markings of a Tomboy

Billy Lee was greatly embarrassed at times because his sister was such a tomboy.

After they told him the new baby was a girl, I found the little fellow sitting on the back steps, his chin in his hands. I asked him why he was so unhappy looking.

"I 'spose she'll be a tomboy, too," he complained, "jus' look at the way her fists are doubled up."

Needed Watching

On a recent automobile trip there were four grown-ups and one child. For hours we had followed the well marked Route 17. I looked at Bobby who was watching intently, but nevertheless looked weary.

"Bobby," said I, "you had better take a nap."

"I'd like to," answered Bobby, "and I'd do it if I wasn't afraid you'd lose 17."

Sister Bertha

A little girl went home from Sunday school (kindergarten department) last Sunday and was asked what she had learned in Sunday school.

She proudly answered that she had learned about Christ's sister.

"But Christ had no sister," was the reply.

"Oh, yes, he did, for the teacher said her name was Bertha Christ."—The Congregationalist.

Phlox as National Flower

The phlox was suggested as a national flower by Dr. Edward Wherry, of the Agricultural department, in addressing the Wildflower Preservation society at Washington, says the Pathfinder Magazine. At various times the columbine, goldenrod, dogwood, mountain laurel and trailing arbutus have been proposed, but congress has not given any flower such distinction. Some states, however, have adopted state flowers.

Popular San Diego Woman Recovers From Long Illness

Amazing Improvement in Mrs. Jester's Health Surprises Friends. Serious Ailments Caused by Nervous Breakdown Relieved and Strength Restored by Tanlac. Looks and Feels Better Than Ever

"Tanlac has certainly done wonders for me; I cannot praise it enough," declares Mrs. T. D. Jester, 1268 Pennsylvania Avenue, San Diego, Calif. "I had suffered a nervous breakdown, and for many months afterward I continued to get worse and worse, despite all the different nerve medicines I tried. Nothing seemed to help until I tried Tanlac.

"I was as near to being a complete nervous and physical wreck as I could be, without entirely collapsing. The slightest noise would make me want to scream, and after retiring it would be hours before I could sleep. I would awaken with terrible nervous headaches and the slightest exertion would tire me out so that I would be trembling. I lost weight and appetite. I tried Tanlac with little expectation of improvement.

"Before I had taken all of the first bottle, I developed a ravenous appetite, and was sleeping better. I continued to improve rapidly and felt like a different person entirely. In less than three weeks I had gained seven pounds! Later, my weight went up from 105 to 125 pounds."

If your troubles are similar to those from which Mrs. Jester suffered so keenly, get relief before it is too late! Tanlac will doubtless help you just as it helped Mrs. Jester—and as it has helped thousands of other sufferers.

Tanlac is a pure and wholesome compound, made from herbs, roots and barks, according to the famous Tanlac formula. It is a wonderful tonic medicine, for run-down and nervous conditions and for digestive disorders. All good druggists sell Tanlac—get your first bottle today! Over 40 million bottles sold.

OCEAN BEACH RESIDENT ON WAY TO CHINA WITH MARINE BATTALION

Among the Marines who sailed for China, on the President Grant, was Lieut. Arthur Burks of 5050 Niagara avenue, who has lived at the Beach for the past three years.

Mr. Burks is adjutant of the 2nd Battalion of the Regiment, and formerly aide to General Smedley D. Butler, who is now in command of the American forces at Shanghai, China. Mr. Burks in collaboration with General Butler, had written several books while here, one being "Walter Garvin in Mexico," and the latest, entitled "The Cock Pit," a romance of Nicaragua, is in the hands of the publishers, Dorrance and Company, Philadelphia. "The Cock Pit will be filmed by the Metro-Goldwyn Company of Hollywood, whenever enough Marines are available at the base.

Those who have read the manuscript pronounce it a great story, full of thrills, love, and war.

EX-MARINE WAS ANXIOUS TO GO TO CHINA

Among those who expected to sail on the President Grant, but did not was Mr. Geo. Copeland of Del Monte avenue. Mr. Copeland had written to Washington for permission to go but was informed by letter from Marine Corps Headquarters that while they appeciated very much, the tender of his services, at the present time, they were unable to avail themselves of same and answering him that if the occasion arose, they would be very glad to call him back to active service. Mr. Copeland served thirty years in the Marines, but has been on the retired list since 1915.

OVER HUNDRED THOUSAND CHILDREN DEPOSITORS IN BANK OF ITALY

Latest figures of the school savings deposits of the Bank of Italy show that on March 31, there was exactly $2,081,605.14 in this account and there were pass books in the hands of just 125,234 child depositors. And taken by and large, the big deposit total did not appear to have created any slump in the lolly-pop, "movie," or ice cream markets. The lunch period "hot-dog" stand seems to be getting as much play as ever before while the child customers of the soda fountains have increased, if anything. The Bank of Italy makes a feature of school savings.

SAUME CAMP FIRE GIRLS
